LEXIS

How LEXIS Works

To do research with LEXIS, you need no knowledge of computers. LEXIS is self-explanatory, and distinctly non-technical. You sit at a computer terminal and give instructions to LEXIS on something much like a typewriter keyboard. LEXIS displays the information you request on an easy-to-read video screen. To review the next page of a case on LEXIS, you press a key labeled, simply, "next page." To examine the next case, you press "next case." And so on. In other words, LEXIS communicates in English, not computer jargon.

A common LEXIS search is for a particular word or phrase likely to appear in cases in which you are interested. Suppose you are handling a product liability case involving pajamas that caught on fire. You instruct LEXIS to find cases in which the word "pajamas" appears in proximity to the word "fire" or "flammable" or "inflammable." (You can, of course, include other potentially relevant words as well, such as "burn," "ignite," "spark," "flame," etc.) LEXIS will then search through vast numbers of cases electronically, and retrieve only those that contain your "search words."

You can review cases immediately on the LEXIS video screen. You need not read through each case entirely. LEXIS offers a feature that lets you scan the section of the case in which your search words appear. You can then determine if your case is on point.

If you need a printout of an entire case, several cases, a portion of a case, or a list of citations, the LEXIS printer does the job promptly. (See last section for a description of LEXIS equipment.)

The Role of LEXIS in Legal Research

Applications

LEXIS may be used effectively across a wide spectrum of research tasks. The following list is intended to be illustrative, not comprehensive, in scope:

1. Locating cases involving specific fact patterns. For example, what are the legal consequences of leaving an ignition key in an unattended boat? LEXIS permits searching for specific fact patterns independently of the legal concepts and principles involved. Fact pattern searches are particularly useful in areas of law in which principles are well defined and cases are decided on nuances of fact.

2. Finding cases involving two or more distinct fields of law. Using hierarchically organized indices is particularly frustrating when this type of situation is encountered. For instance, in researching the tax consequences of a particular kind of contract, do you consider tax the primary issue and the contract secondary, or vice versa? With LEXIS you have the flexibility to combine the ideas without worrying about how an indexer would classify a case which involves legal principles from more than one specialty.

3. Locating cases involving specific legal principles, such as res ipsa loquitur and mens rea.

4. Identifying opinions written by a particular judge, or in which particular counsel appeared.

5. Locating cases or statutes containing particular terms or phrases (e.g., de facto segregation, unconscionable, short swing profits).

6. Retrieving cases that discuss the language contained in a standard contract.

7. Finding cases that construe particular statutory provisions or contain definitions of statutory language or discuss several statutory provisions.

8. Locating a case when only the name of a party, or docket number, or other limited information is known.

9. Using LEXIS as a citator to locate the most recent cases citing an earlier decision, statute, treatise, or article.

10. Obtaining the text of a recent opinion that is not yet available in the advance sheets.

11. Obtaining the text of a U.S. district court decision that was not included in any case law reporter.

12. Determining how federal circuit or district courts have applied a U.S. Supreme Court decision in subsequent cases.

13. Double checking other research. LEXIS can be used to examine the accuracy of previously prepared work or of a brief submitted by opposing counsel.

With LEXIS, you can review all retrieved materials relevant to a case without leaving your seat. You can switch from federal to state cases, and back again, instantly. You can look up a federal regulation, check a Supreme Court decision, review a section of U.S. Code, and much more. Research has never been so convenient.

But LEXIS offers much more than convenience. It offers thoroughness and currency as well.

You do not have to wait for slip opinions to find their way into print, and you do not have to rely on law book editors when you are searching for cases on point. Indexes and digests may be helpful, but they can limit you in your search for usable information. Law book editors select the issues they think are important to include in digests. They also choose the index headings. This means you must often guess how the editors classified a potentially relevant case. What may have seemed insignificant to an editor a few years ago may be crucial to you today.

LEXIS transcends the entire problem, since you search for material by words, not indexes or digests. You engage in a dialogue with LEXIS, refining your search as you go along. The computer takes care of the legwork: it finds and displays cases. You are left with more time for the brainwork only a lawyer can do: assessing relevance, conceiving of new approaches to the problem, and making sure that all fruitful avenues have been explored.

11 Reasons Why LEXIS Belongs in Your Firm

1. LEXIS contains more case law than any other computer-assisted research service. Thousands of slip opinions appear in LEXIS that are extremely difficult to obtain and to research.

2. LEXIS is more current than printed sources. Slip opinions are added shortly after receipt from the courts. If and when the court changes or corrects the language of the decision, these court-approved corrections are added to LEXIS along with subsequent publisher's cites.

3. LEXIS is updated continually. Recent cases quickly become available for your research.

4. LEXIS gives you the original material. There is no third party to stand between you and the law as originally written. Headnote systems—used by other research services—can put you at a disadvantage by missing points of law. With LEXIS, the complete, original text is at your disposal—instantly.

5. LEXIS gives you access to the three major citator services: Shepard's, Auto-Cite, and LEXIS itself. Everything you need to do a comprehensive citation search is right at your LEXIS terminal.

6. LEXIS saves you time. Searches usually take 15 seconds or less. Research sessions usually run less than 15 minutes.

7. LEXIS is exceptionally easy to use. No computer knowledge is necessary. LEXIS works in simple, everyday English, not computer jargon. More than 100,000 lawyers, most without previous computer experience, have received instruction on LEXIS use.

8. LEXIS is available 23 hours a day on weekdays, and 14½ hours a day on weekends, Christmas, and New Year's Day.

9. LEXIS offers you and every user in your firm a unique and informative instruction course. You go from the basics to far beyond in about three hours. Refresher and advanced courses are available anytime you need them.

10. LEXIS provides your firm with a personal account representative, who will keep all LEXIS users in your firm up to date on how to get the most from LEXIS.

11. LEXIS offers you a variety of informational resources that can provide essential background for your cases. NEXIS (an information service that offers the complete text of leading newspapers, magazines, and newswires), the Encyclopaedia Britannica, DIALOG (an online information service offering digests of over 100 data bases), an Accounting Information Library, Disclo, and the New York Times Information Bank are all available to you through your LEXIS terminal.

How Big Does a Law Firm Have to be to Afford LEXIS?

Almost every large law firm in America uses LEXIS. But what about firms that are not so large?

In a recent article published in the New York Law Journal, Frank J. Costello of Zuckert, Scoutt & Rasenberger (Washington D.C.) writes:

"Our experience would indicate that once a firm has six or more attorneys, computer-assisted legal research becomes economically feasible."

Increasing numbers of firms with 5 to 20 lawyers are now using LEXIS, as well as significant numbers of firms with fewer than 5 lawyers. There are also many sole practitioners with LEXIS terminals in their offices.

Clearly, there must be a reason for LEXIS' continuing popularity. There is. LEXIS is cost effective in the truest sense. It gives you more information in less time. In fact, with LEXIS you can often find information that non-LEXIS users cannot find at all. In legal research, quality is paramount. Nothing increases research quality or productivity like LEXIS. One person can do the work of several, and each researcher can handle more projects, in less time and more efficiently. If this were not true, LEXIS would not enjoy the pre-eminent position it does.

Before making a decision about LEXIS, you may want to contact other law firms now using this service. In the long run, of course, you are the best judge as to whether or not LEXIS is a worthwhile investment. But the experience of firms of similar size to your own may prove instructive. It's worth noting that LEXIS cancellations are rare, even among smaller firms. Since law firms tend to scrutinize investments quite carefully, it is safe to assume that LEXIS more than pays its own way.

To return to the initial question: how big should a firm be before it employs LEXIS? The answer is this: a law firm can afford LEXIS when it can no longer afford to be without the most comprehensive research available today. Remember, the most expensive research of all is that which fails to turn up the right case. In this sense not using LEXIS can be costly, since LEXIS "turns up" more relevant cases than any service of its kind. And the winning of even one case with the help of information found with LEXIS will most likely recoup your entire investment.

LEXIS Lets You Perform Research Virtually Impossible by Conventional Means

Here are just a few of the ways LEXIS can find specific cases for you in less time than it takes to read this page.

- By judge
- By court
- By date (LEXIS can find cases before a given date, after a given date, on a given date, or between two given dates)
- By words or phrases or combinations of words or phrases used in the decision
- By counsel (in some libraries)
- By section of a statute or regulation

You can also use combination searches to find, say, the opinions of a particular circuit court judge between two specific dates, or from a specific date to the present. Or perhaps you need to review Chief Justice Burger's opinions on double jeopardy. LEXIS will find all relevant cases for you in a matter of moments.

Suppose your firm is involved in a product liability case. To research this case thoroughly, you would most likely review pertinent case law, study the judge's previous decisions and opinions, analyze prior tactics of opposing counsel, and gain background material on the litigants by reading relevant news stories. You can get all of this information—usually within minutes—from one unique source: LEXIS.

A view of the Mead Data Central computer center, near Dayton, Ohio. The computers housed here give LEXIS its extraordinary capabilities; among them, the ability to search through thousands of cases in seconds, and to handle requests from LEXIS terminals all over the country simultaneously.

LEXIS Has Been Cited by the Courts...

- "In preparing this opinion we learned first through *LEXIS and then from the Georgia Attorney General's office that the Georgia Supreme Court decided on February 26, 1980, that in its view the questioned Georgia statute is constitutional." Helms v. Jones, 621 F.2d 211 (5th Cir. 1980.)

- "Only one other decision has come to the attention of this Court. That opinion, Allen v. Civitello... carried on LEXIS but otherwise unreported, reached the same conclusion as the conclusion herein." American Benefit Plan v. Foley, No. CV 81-1715 AWT (C.D. Ca 1981).

- "Neither party has cited case authority construing the statute within the context of this application. After extensive research, including the use of the LEXIS computer system, the Court is satisfied that no such case exists." Miller and Rhoads v. West, 442 F. Supp. 341 (E.D. Va. 1977).

- "I have read every Tenth Circuit case spewed out by that modern miracle, *LEXIS ..." United States v. Alberico, 453 F. Supp. 178 (D.Co. 1977).

Incidentally, LEXIS itself was used to find those cases which mention LEXIS. There are, at this writing, scores of them. To discover these cases any other way would be extraordinarily time consuming, and perhaps impossible. LEXIS found all the cases in 15 seconds.

Searching for Citations the Modern Way—with LEXIS

Citation searching, the old way, meant endlessly poring over thick volumes, checking—and double checking—supplements, and generally consuming a lot of time, tediously and, today, needlessly.

Citation searching, the modern way, means using LEXIS for instant, thorough checks. LEXIS citation checks are easier, faster, and often more up to date than the volumes and supplements themselves.

LEXIS offers all three major citation services. With these, you can verify or trace the history and treatment of virtually any citation:

1. Shepard's Citations

All Shepard's case-law citators are included in LEXIS: federal, state, and regional reporter series. Shepard's provides parallel citations, case history, subsequent treatment of the case, and all cases that cite the cited case. Shepard's is a product of Shepard's/McGraw-Hill.

2. Auto-Cite

Auto-Cite offers a virtually instantaneous verification of a cite. Auto-Cite provides the name of the case cited, the date and place of decision, official and parallel citations, and the citation to any case that directly affects the official status of the case as precedent. Auto-Cite is a service of the Lawyers Co-operative Publishing Company and its affiliate, Bancroft-Whitney.

3. LEXIS itself

LEXIS finds cases by name, citation, or both. LEXIS as a citator can prove invaluable when only the name of the case is known, as when an important case is to be relied upon before it has been given a citation. Thousands of recent slip opinions are available only through LEXIS. LEXIS also contains thousands of cases that never appear in the reporters. You will find it a considerable advantage to perform a citation search by name as well as by citation. You will also appreciate the fact that LEXIS can find citations in documents other than cases, such as statutes, regulations, or Supreme Court briefs.

The Information You Need is Displayed on an Easy-to-Read Video Screen

At the push of a button, LEXIS not only displays cases for you, it gives you a choice of formats. On this screen you see the KWIC format. This stands for "Key Word In Context." It is an invaluable format for a quick scan to see if a case is relevant. Your search word(s) always appear in context, with about 25 words on either side. As always, the search word(s) are highlighted, so you're sure to spot them. If you like what you see in KWIC, you can turn to...

...FULL, which displays the entire case for you. You can review it quickly there and then, and study it in detail later, either from the books or from a LEXIS printout (see last screen).

You can even display a list of the citations of all cases discovered when LEXIS fulfilled your search request.

If you need hard copy, LEXIS can give it to you in just a few seconds. You can get printouts in any LEXIS format you like: KWIC, FULL, a list of cites, or any of several other convenient formats.
